Here is an incident from the South Mississippi, written in April, 1890, ust after the Grippe had visited that country. "I am a farmer, one of those who have to rise early and work late. At the beginning of last Winter I was on a trip to the City of Vicksburg, Miss., where I got well drenched in a shower of rain. I went home and was soon after seized with a dry, hacking cough. This grew worse every day, until I had to seek relief. I consulted Dr. Dixon who has since died, and he told me to get a bottle of Boschee's German Byrup. Meantime my cough grew worse and worse and then the Grippe tame along and I caught that also America, and was also lord high advery severely. My condition then | miral of the English navy. He had compelled me to do something. I much of the second bottle, I was entirely clear of the Cough that had hung to me so long, the Grippe, and all its bad effects. I felt tip-top and have felt that way ever since."

8 ms Bite.

It was on a State st reet car, says the Chicago Mail. When the start was made at the barns the major portion of the occupants were of the male sex. Gradually, however, as the car neared the heart of the city, the ladies, bent | Welsees on shopping, had crowded into the car and usurped all the seats; that is, with the exception of one double seat, which was occupied by an old man who had long since pas I mankind's alloted three score and ha years and a youth of perhaps 20 years. The latter was dressed in the height of fashion and had looked with the utmost contempt at the men who had one by one surrendered their seats to the fairer sex. The car stopped at Twenty-fourth street and two ladies of matronly bearing, each with a babe in her arms, entered. They looked about for a seat, but none was in view, and they and aristocratic youth as legitimate prey, and accordingly edged up to where the pair were seated. The old man glanced up and perceived the child-laden women standing patiently by: a giance about the car showed no vacancies among the seats, and then he yielded his seat to one of the ladies. The aristoc atic youth smiled sarcastically and muttered something about a "soft old duder." The aged gallant heard this slur, and, turning, asked the youth:

'You paid your fare, did you not?" "I did. How does that concern you?" retorted the youth.

"Consequently you are entitled to a seat, having paid a nickel and been so fortunate as to capture a chair. Is that the way you reason?"

"Yes. Why?" was the sullen re-

The Naval Omeor's Title.

The title of naval officer as applied to one of the officials of the custom house has always been an enigma to most people, and very few have any dea of how it was created. The office dates back to the colonial days, when Chartes IL was king of England and his brother, afterward James II., was duke of York. James received a percentage on all customs receipts in order to protect his own interests he insisted on appointing a man whose duly it would be to approve every permit issued by the collector before it would be valid. As lord high admiral he naturally selected these men from PETER J. BRIALS, Jr., Cayuga, Hines his own officers and placed a naval officer in every custom house in the British provinces in America. Both the office and the duties remain practically unchanged to this day, and the "naval officer." who is merely an auditor; must still countersign all permits. -Philadelphia Record.

A Little Stater Cross.

'The best protection a young wo-man can have in this city," said a big policeman on the Broadway squad, New York, "is one of those little silver crosses that the King's Daughters wear. I've noticed that nowadays the professional masher will look first at even a stare. It's the same way on street cars as on the street. The young woman who wears one of those badges has got the whole carload of men to take care of her and jump on the fellow that dares to annoy her. The cross is getting to be looked on with the same respect and deference as a nun's garb. As a safeguard it bests the average policeman all hollow."

Saliva of Nervous People.

Dentists have discovered that tartar, calcareous deposit on the teeth, is more abundant in persons of highly nervous temperament than in any others. The explanation, according to an observant dentist, is that persons of nervous temperament secrete more saliva than others, and as tartar is carried by saliva in solution the deposit in the case of such persons is unusually large. It is a well-known fact that the nervous condition has a marked effect upon the salivary gland. An oriental method of detecting crime is to take several persons suspected of dry wheat. The nervous fears of the guilty man seal up his salivary gland tic ports. and he chokes in attempting to reduce
